

Candrice R. Heath, MD

Assistant Professor of Dermatology
Director of Pediatric Dermatology
Temple University
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, USA

Dr. Candrice R. Heath is a highly respected dermatologist. She is triple board-certified in Dermatology, Pediatrics and Pediatric Dermatology.

She received her undergraduate degree from Wake Forest University and her medical degree from the University of Virginia. She completed her pediatric training at Emory University in Atlanta, GA. She then completed dermatology clinical research fellowships with Dr. Susan Taylor in Philadelphia and Dr. Amy Paller at Northwestern while working in Pediatric Urgent Care/ER as a pediatrician. She went on to complete her dermatology training at Mt. Sinai St. Luke's-Roosevelt in New York City. Dr. Heath was selected chief dermatology resident during her final year of training. She then served in a dual role at Johns Hopkins University as a pediatric dermatology fellow and dermatology instructor. Following this experience, she joined a private practice, then left private practice to pursue her interest in academic dermatology.

Currently, Dr. Heath is an Assistant Professor of Dermatology and Director of Pediatric Dermatology at Temple University.

Dr. Heath is a nationally recognized speaker and holds a variety of leadership roles including being the National Secretary-Treasurer for the Skin of Color Society (SOCS), Temple University's Committee on the status on Faculty of Color, Lewis Katz School of Medicine (Temple) Status of Women Faculty Committee, AAD Diversity Committee, co-leader of the pediatric dermatology sub-group of the AAD skin of color curriculum sub-taskforce and Dr. Heath is one of the inaugural members of the Pediatric Dermatology Research Alliance Skin of Color Group.

Her academic goals include performing high impact clinical research that translates into better understanding, treatments, and approaches for patients with skin of color.

When Dr. Heath is not seeing patients, speaking, on Zoom calls or posting on social media, she enjoys spending time with her new husband and bonus daughter.
